Our City Guests Have Departed

Looking After the Public Health No Longer Medical Question Alone.

By DR. F. F. GAY, University of California.

The public health is a very broad and almost medical training is desirable for public health work, it is no longer adequate for a comprehension of the field of the public health work. Many specialized fields, such as military engineering, social economy, industrial hygiene, and indeed certain of the medical sciences, such as bacteriology, physiology and zoology, are of the highest importance in the hands of graduates of the profession. The practitioner of medicine himself should no longer imagine that he has vested rights in the field of public health or, indeed, that he can hope to control it, except in so far as his conception of the entire problem is larger than that of his own medical profession.

A thorough study of the extent of the field covered by public health, as might be expected, that the art of public health has concerned itself primarily with the prevention of disease, but has been somewhat recent in attacking the problems of vice, delinquency, poverty and ignorance. It is foreseen that the scope of public health will develop along these lines.

The whole field of social sciences has been notably neglected. In this connection the control of poverty, the care of dependents, social aspects of city government and the labor problem may be mentioned. Further consideration of industrial hygiene seems important, not simply from the standpoint of occupational disease and its prevention, but from the aspect of the labor problem.

A group of studies that may be included under medical hygiene, that is really a branch of public health, are abnormal psychology, criminology, studies of vice and child hygiene and eugenics, which are closely related.

"A More Brotherly Distribution of Wealth, Health, Joy and Freedom"

By REV. JAMES MEYER, Waukegan, Pa., N. Y.

The mission of religion to the present disordered social order is not so much a message to the poor to respect the sacredness of the property rights of the rich, which it is that, also, as it is a message to the rich to respect the property rights of the poor.

This cannot be done by charity, nor can it be done by violence. The inequalities of the present economic order can be eliminated only by a more brotherly distribution of the profits of industry at the source of production.

Wealth can be redistributed in a brotherly way only where it is made in the process of its production, by the granting of a truly living wage, by a voluntary decrease in the interest expected for the use of capital, and by a very material increase in the financial rewards paid to human beings for their labor of hand and brain.

It is brotherly that the financial burden of life should be shared down the hardest upon those who have the least. It is brotherly that a poor man should have to pay the highest price for all of the necessities of life. It is brotherly that the laborer's pay should stop the minute he gets into the home and has to lay to waste, while the higher-paid officials of the company, although better able to stand the financial strain of sickness, have their salaries continued to them as long as they are ill. It is brotherly that the highest profits in the real estate business should be concentrated from transient property, the least desirable accommodations in the whole city, where the poorest people have to live?

The question no longer is how does the other half live? The question has come to be how does the other 85 per cent live? The answer is to be found in a more brotherly distribution of wealth.

"Young Man Who Settles on Homestead Claim 100 Per Cent American"

By WILLIAM SPRY, U. S. Land Commissioner

The young man who settled on a homestead claim with his family is 100 per cent American. He is very American. He is for the help of the poor. The general land office is eager to co-operate with his homesteading efforts to assist him in laying proper claim in accordance with the departmental regulations. The office is not a detective bureau, as some people think. It is a bureau established to help those who would help themselves.

Many returned soldiers have taken up homestead claims and the advantages offered by the government. The number of applicants has increased remarkably in the past few months.

Charles Dickens was writing in the streets of London, and he was writing to the people of London. He was writing to the people of London, and he was writing to the people of London.

Reading the information which the story may give, his mind, which was a mind of a man, was a mind of a man.

In order to do Oliver's work, by making him a criminal, he is taken into a workhouse, and he is taken into a workhouse.
