SUPERSTITION SURVIVES

During the recent period of anxiety for Roald Amundsen and his fellow airplane explorers in the Arctic, an Italian spiritualistic medium declared she had had a "revelation" while in a trance and announced that three of the party were dead.

Other details of the fate of the expedition were given and broadcast to the world in press dispatches, which were no doubt taken seriously by thousands of people. Three days later Amundsen and his companions returned from their perilous trip in safety.

It appears easy to obscure cranks to obtain a little brief notoriety by pretending to be possessed of occult powers, whereby they predict anything ranging from a minor disaster to the end of the world.

Millions of people who are otherwise reasonably sensible are actually impressed by these imaginings of crack-brained individuals and often worry greatly over the lugubrious predictions made.

Once in a while some prophecy accidentally appears to come true and gullible persons immediately ascribe the coincidence to supernormal powers of the "prophet."

In spite of our surpassing civilization, a majority of people are still steeped in superstition of one kind or another. Because of this, fortune tellers and other charlatans flourish.

IS IT FAIR?

While the United States Supreme Court has ruled that publication of armament news has paid off firms and individuals is lawful under the 1924 tax law (which seems to have been the only property of the act itself).

Should the profits accruing to taxpayers during any given year be made public, as a matter of principle? There are differing views of course.

Those against publicity argue that it violates a pledge made by the government in order to secure ratification of the income tax amendment by the states; it having been promised at the time that returns would be held as confidential.

Further, that publicity gives business rivals the opportunity to take advantage of a concern that may be losing money; that it furnishes material for gossip, often unjust, because a simple statement of the amount of tax paid is very little lead to all the circumstances are known.

Lastly, that it would tempt taxpayers to fabricate when a true return would appear in public criticism.

The point which seems most important is that of giving competitors undue insight into a taxpayer's business affairs. Carried to its logical conclusion this principle would require every firm or individual to open all books and correspondence to the inquisitive gaze of the public.

WESLEY AN EVOLUTIONIST

John Wesley, founder of Methodism was an evolutionist, according to Dr. Edward Mims of Vanderbilt University at Nashville, who gives strong proof of his assertion in a quotation from the writings of the great theologian and preacher.

In an essay entitled "A General View of the Gradual Progression of Beings," written long before Darwin's time, John Wesley writes as follows:

"By what degree does Nature raise herself man? How will she rectify this head that is always looking toward the stars? How change these fixed stars into men? Will she not then will she make use of to transform these crooked feet, these skilful and supine hands? Or will she when and extend this contracted stomach? Tis she is the rough draft of a man, this rough sketch an imperfect representation which nevertheless bears a resemblance to him and is the last creature that serves to display the admirable progression of the works of God. But mankind have their gradations as well as other productions of our globe. There is a prodigious number of links between the most perfect man and the ape."

STATE DEBTS INCREASE

PUBLIC debts, national, state and local, are increasing by tremendous bounds and thoughtful citizens may well view with concern the tendency to mortgage the country's future.

In the past ten years the average net debt of the states of the Union has increased by approximately 275 per cent. Debts of counties and cities have also been mounting at a prodigious rate, while the vast national debt due to the war still confronts us.

Under these conditions it is no wonder that the tax burden is becoming a most oppressive.

It will become more and more difficult for the present to furnish governmental expenses unless cities decide to encourage remittance.

Voters should carefully scrutinize new propositions for bond issues in the light of common sense. Many new issues may be entirely justified, but in a majority of cases there will be found behind them a scheme to increase the army of officers with no corresponding benefit to the public.

FRENCH SECURITY

With bitter opposition in England, with Italy so far non-committal, and with the United States holding aloof, it appears that the proposed treaty guaranteeing security for France against German aggression has a hard road to travel.

If the so-called security pact shall be ratified at all by Great Britain, there will probably be numerous reservations tacked on to the treaty as it now stands. The situation is similar to that which existed in the United States with respect to the League of Nations. In fact, some of the language used by opponents of the proposition sound quite familiar.

The London Daily Chronicle attacks the pact on the ground that Britain has given in the pretty quid pro quo of security for Europe and adds:

"So-called Poland attacks Germany and France. Poland's air (she is already bound to it) and is beaten. Or, supposing Hungary attacks Czechoslovakia and France unsuccessfully intervenes. In either case (England) would be compelled to go to France's assistance."

At present it appears that the greatest danger to peace lies between Poland and Germany, because of the Polish "corridor" to the Baltic, cutting through former German territory, and separating Germany proper from East Prussia. And France is pledged by treaty to protect Poland in case of German aggression.

On the other hand, if France is denied a guarantee of security, she will insist on maintaining a military force sufficient to protect herself without aid from her former allies.

From this it appears that lack of money is all that stands in the way of further bloodshed in Europe right now. Politically the situation is far worse than it was in the early part of 1914.

ENCOURAGING REPORT

S. Parker Gilmer, the young American who has charge of the peace plan operations in Germany, has made his first report after eight months of labor in his difficult post.

On the whole the report is optimistic and declares that two of the essential preliminary objects of the plan—balancing of the German budget and stabilizing of the mark—have been achieved.

Mr. Gilmer also commends the German government for its co-operation in putting the plan into operation thus far.

We are little actual progress has been made in payment of reparations by Germany, the fact that the early stages of the international commission's task have been marked by evidences of good will on the part of the debtor country is encouraging.

BIG DAILIES VANISHING

There seems to be a race on between Mr. Murphy of New York and Mr. Curtis of Philadelphia, to see who can buy the largest number of big weeklies and mid-weeklies. It may be that in a few years four or five major dailies will be the only large dailies in our country. The country weeklies and small city dailies remain the big independent group of newspapers. There are some fourteen thousand of these published and read in the homes of the people and reaching a majority of the population.
