The value in money is in what it will buy—the necessities, the comforts, the luxuries of life. Money spent in this community to buy these things for its people stays here where each and every person shares in the new profits its trading produces.

More modern conveniences, a wider social life, a greater business activity—in fact, a far reaching, ever growing wave of benefits to every citizen of Barrington follows our practice of buying at home.

Open the purse strings—not to spend foolishly, but to buy wisely. Barrington offers you full value for every dollar's worth you buy, plus the greatest of all returns on your money—"A Better and a Happier Community in Which to Live."

BARRINGTON REVIEW

BARRINGTON, ILL.

BURDENING THE MAIIS

That the postal service will have a $100,000 deficit this year is not due to any particular fault of the service itself, but rather to the inherent weakness of government operation of business enterprises.

There is no doubt that with private management, free from the red tape and unscientific methods which obtain at present, the postal service would be made self-sustaining without increasing rates or reducing its efficiency.

But private management would not transport carloads of the Congressmen's records for distribution of political mail at public expense, bring envelops at a loss than cost. It would not select its most important executives on the strength of their political activity. It would not do many other valuable things being done.

During the campaign it is reported that Washington mail records at the expense of political mail were brought to a standstill. It is better that before the campaign ends that 60 tons of this free political mail will be going out of Washington each day.

Politicians of both parties are responsible for this abuse of their official positions. The public pays the bill. What else is an easy-going public for anyway?

VETERAN PENSIONERS

Since the Armistice in 1918, 100,000 Augustus March at the age of 101, but three surviving veterans of the Mexican War remain on the pension rolls. They are William F. Buckner of Paris, Mo., aged 100; John Thomas Edgar of Washington, D. C., and Richard B. Howard of Sterling, Tex., both 97.

But while there are only three veterans remaining, there were 970 Mexican War widows drawing pensions last year; also 17 widows of the War of 1812.

The greatest number of pensioners on the rolls is 1928, with 595,714 veterans and widows drawing $14,627,579, owing to greater liberality of the pension laws. 49,942 veterans and widows drew $230,152,712 in 1927.

What few will begrudge these veterans and widows the pensions allowed by the federal government, the fact that these large sums must be raised by taxation constitutes an additional argument for peace. Every war involves not only its immediate cost in lives and treasure, but saddles upon the backs of future generations enormous pension bills which national honor demands shall be paid.

We are still paying pensions on account of the War of 1812, after the lapse of 116 years. Will pensions on account of the War end? And in the meantime what about the debts?

Before they begin rattling the sword too loudly, statesmen should think on these things.

BAN ON BILLBOARDS

From many sections of the country come further reports of official action against the billboard nuisance, which has done more to destroy the natural beauty of the country than any other single factor.

A vigorous campaign against billboards is being waged by several national organizations, the woman's clubs being particularly active in the movement. They are in many instances appealing to the advertiser direct, showing him that his billboards which deface the scenery merely will interfere with the farm for the farm resort to this form of publicity.

The utter disregard for the rights of the public which has been displayed by the billboard manufacturers, the just indignation of all sections of society, the vertebrae billboards along the highways and in residential sections of cities and towns should not be tolerated in a community which prides itself to be civilized.

BROAD-GAUGE CHARITY

In the will of the late Aaron Naumburg of New York large sums left a wing of charitable and educational institutions, including the broad sympathies of this son of a Jewish rabbi, who had amassed great wealth.

Jewish charities were naturally remembered liberally in Naumburg's last test. The largest single bequest to charitable institutions also came in for a generous share. Besides, he gave a substantial sum to the Tuskegee Institute for negroes, to Harvard University, to the American Museum of Natural History, to the Philanthropic Society, and other charitable organizations.

More than one prominent captain of industry and business getting the habit of leaving portions of their wealth to be used for the public welfare. Their bequests to educational, religious, and charitable institutions have been very beyond compare, either in terms of dollars or in their permanence.

Among all who have thus contributed of their wealth to these worthy objects, few have illustrated a finer spirit of human brotherhood than Aaron Naumburg, a Jew.

CANADIAN PROGRESS

Canada made very satisfactory progress during the past year, according to J. H. Gunn, president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, in his annual report. The country has points out that agricultural, industrial and financial development continued with increased energy and success. During 1927 corporate financing reached a total of about $380,000,000, the largest in any year in the Dominion's history.

Trade was abundant, and public and private interests were able to borrow at lower rates than existed in any other country except the United States. During the year the government was able to retire $55,000,000 of maturing Victory bonds out of its

the importance of the financial relations between the two countries is shown by the fact that United States investments in Canada now amount to nearly four billion dollars only a little less than the total of American investment in all Europe.

NEILSON'S FLAGSHIP

A pigmy in comparison with modern fighting craft, the British ship Victory, flagship of the Royal Navy, has been restored to its original condition.

Launched in 1765, the Victory sailed the seas for 157 years until 1922, since which the work of restoration has been in progress.

But she still sail no more, being now permanently installed in dry dock at Portsmouth as a naval shrine and flagship of the port.

The Victory is only 227 feet long, with 62 feet beam and a tonnage of 2162. The United States line Leviathan is about thirty times as long.

The advantage of having a car equipped with such a device would be greater than its cost of operation. The jack could be there when it was needed. Neighbors could not steal it, and neighbors could not borrow it.

SKINNING SUCKERS

An unusual incident is reported from the New York customs house, where a wealthy American sought to bring from Europe a shipment of "skins of the pectoral of the pectoral of the pectoral of the pectoral."

Government appraisers questioned the genuineness of the furniture and assessed the regular duty. The owner protested and had experts called in to give their opinions as to whether the furniture was more than 100 years old, as had been represented by European dealers. The experts agreed that the furniture was less than 25 years old. Thus the "easy" purchaser found that he had been swindled and had to pay the duty besides.

This illustrates the gullibility of many Americans who ransack Europe for "antiques" often paying fabulous prices for stuff that has been manufactured expressly for this sucker trap.

Denouncing a man is hardly more offensive than praising his rival.

It is a series presented to the museum by the University of Chicago, which is the work of Charles H. H. Koechlin, a noted author and lecturer in the field of paleontology. The series consists of 1000 specimens, each one based on a specimen found in the earth.

O. C. F. Currier, curator of paleontology at the museum, one of the most distinguished paleontologists in the country, who has based his entire life on the study of the earth, said that the pictures are based, tell the story of the earth as it was 1200,000,000 years ago.

According to the theory of the earth, the planet was a ball of fire, and the first life to appear was the single-celled protoplasm.
