THE OLDEST REPORTER

Probably the oldest active reporter in the country is Theodore F. Shuey, 85 years old, who has held one job nearly 62 years. He is also one of the most accurate reporters in the country. His blue eyes colors his news, except possibly to correct grammatical errors in the speeches which he records.

He is an official reporter of Senate debates for that well-known and sometimes derided publication, the Congressional Record.

Shuey became a senator reporter in 1868, when Andrew Johnson was president, the year of Grant's first election. He has recorded the proceedings of the Senate who have sat in that seat, that naturally who have had a hand full of interesting memories.

He thinks that George Graham Vest of Missouri was the best orator the Senate had in all these years. Ingalls of Kansas was one of the most interesting, he who once belonged to a Delaware saloon as a "Senator from a state which has three a tie at low tide and two at high tide."

Shuey thought Summer of Massachusetts was the most concientious of Senators of whom it was said he did not believe the Bible because someone else had written it.

Among the present Senators, Shuey says that Johnson, King, Heflin and Moses are easiest to follow and record in shorthand. While his fortune for the reporters for the senators named generally have good deal to do.

SURGEONS BIDS WANTED

While there can be no reasonable objection to the custom of calling for bids on any contract involving a large amount, the habit makes professional men have to change bids on small quantities of printed matter is sometimes exasperating to printers.

In many cases bids are asked on jobs amounting to only a few dollars, where several printers must prudently make cost in time and trouble than possibly saving money.

According to a story, now being widely published, one printer was wily of bidding on jobs, so he asked a printer who had asked for bids on small quantities of letterheads, and also requested that the type form be left standing, so that he might have the benefit of cheaper rates for future orders, the printer with whom he had been bidding.

When he asked for bids on one operation for apprentices, one, two or five inch incision—with or without ether—also with or without nurse. If appended is found to be sound, we quote him the price of making said and cutting said order. The printer, however, is expected to hold incision open for about sixty days as I expect to be in the market for an operation for gallstones at that time and want to save the extra cost of cutting.

COAL CAR TO VANISH

Wire and pipe lines will ultimately make the coal car obsolete, according to a prediction by President Baker of the Carnegie Institute of Technology. Wires will carry electric current and pipe lines will carry oil to centers of industry for power and heating purposes, he declared.

This transition has already made great strides, not only in industrial plants, but in homes as well, where the coal stove and furnace are rapidly superseded by more modern heating equipment. Stoves, furnaces, stoves and other products of present-day engineering skill are making the coal scuttle obsolete.

Dr. Baker's prediction is supported by other experts, who point out that the newer devices are conducive to health through automatic maintenance of desired temperatures in the home, besides eliminating the coal dust, soot and other nuisance which accompany the use of coal in its crude state.

Thus applied science is bringing economy and efficiency to industry, and cleanliness, comfort and health to the home.

BRIDGE FIEND TEST

Considering the great spread of the bridge-playing industry, it is strange that none of our legislators has had any laws passed for its regulation. Now comes a suggestion that players be compelled to pass an examination before being licensed to indulge in the game.

The suggestion comes, not from a United States Senator, but from an editor, whose seal for the public welfare has been aroused by a report from Kansas City, where a wife shot her husband. The victim was also the lady's bridge partner, it appears, and when he bid one spade and another player played on a different suit, his wife raised to four spades. The husband at first blamed the game for his needless killing, and as a result of the argument she shot him.

Now, the aforesaid editor asserts, all persons who aspire to play bridge should be caused to pass a rigid test, not with reference to their skill, but to determine their mental power. If the applicant is unable to set or have an ace trumped without showing undue emotion, a license should be denied.

The trouble is that such a law, if enforced, would practically eliminate all who take the game seriously.

A COUNTING ROOSTER

Experiments in psychology are being carried on enthusiastically with many kinds of animal life as subjects. A recent test reported from the University of Chicago is quite interesting.

Kernels of corn were placed in a row on the floor, with every third kernel tucked down, and a rooster was presented to help himself. The rooster, fastidious in his habits, passed and passed and sat the roost. The remaining kernels were replaced and next time he made no attempt to devour the stationary kernels. Then the third kernels were loosened, but he still passed them by until his foot struck one and moved it; then he went back and ate them.

Those who witnessed the experiment believe that it proved the rooster's ability to count; others were skeptical. Possibly he was an unusual bird, and had been influenced by his unusual environment.

It doesn't seem to be the truth of the story, but if you did it try the experiment on your rooster.

MARTYRS TO SCIENCE

Two bacteriologists have already given their lives in the effort to stamp out parrot fever, the newly discovered disease transmitted by infected parrots. These men are Dr. William Royal Stokes of Baltimore and Harry E. Anderson, a government laboratory assistant. Two others, Dr. Daniel S. Hatfield and Dr. Charles Armstrong, are suffering from the disease, but have an improved chance of recovery.

One of the ways for this rickebill life is to eat an emulsion of the spirit of oil of turpentine in the regular services of the church and to drink it.

Even life with the spirit of oil of turpentine continues to light up others in the light of the spirit of oil of turpentine in the body in which to live.

Above from our own personal experience, the church and the spirit of oil of turpentine will make Barrington a still better town.

Our library begins at 8:30 a.m.; morning session, 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.; afternoon session at 7:30. In the morning the pastor will speak on the theme, "The Church and the Community." Dr. Charles Armstrong, Dr. Hatfield, these men now a new and an enriched life.

CANADIAN TOURISTS

Comments and statistics quoted in the Literary Digest, which is a good source in Canada's tourist "army," which has become a substantial source of revenue, reaching last year a total of about 360 million dollars, as compared with only about 91 million dollars in 1929.

More than 90 per cent of these expenditures are made by tourists from the United States, while Canadian spend approximately one-third as much on the American side of the line.

Another striking fact is seen in the statistics that the number of Americans who visited Canada last year was close to 15 million, or about one and one-half as many people as the entire population of the Dominion. Well-disposed persons on both sides of the border are not too much worried over the increasing cost of living.

Just how much of Mr. Voldstad is not shown by the statistical reports.
