IMPROVING BARRINGTON

IMPROVING BARRINGTON

One general improvement which can make Barrington more desirable as a residential community than any other improvement possibly can, one which is more effective in raising property values than paved streets, good lighting, good stores, and at least as effective as good schools and churches, is improved outside appearances of homes.

A project to encourage improvement in home appearance has been indertaken by the civic clubs of Barrington and is now being launched. The second annual yard and garden contest, affered for the sole purpose of improving the home community is about to get under way. The civic clubs, eight merchants of the town, are offering prizes for winners in the contest. No direct return is possible for these merchants or civic clubs, although indirectly every person who owns property in Barrington will be benefited if the contest succeeds in its purpose: namely that of improving the home appearance of the village.

The first annual contest held last year was a success.

The first annual contest held last year was a success.

Forty-six homes were entered in the contest, and these with many others showed some degree of improved appearance as the result of the undertaking. Many homes not entered were "kept up with the Joneses" while the contest was un-

If the yard and garden contest attracts a goodly number of home entries this year it will again be a success.

GETTING DOWN TO FACTS

GETTING DOWN TO FACTS

Washington politicians, trying to look at the muchheralded "Better Times" through the eyes of the nation's farmers, were a bit surprised at the wise words spoken to them the other day by Tom Catheart, editor of The Country Home, a national farm magazine.
"What's the outlook in agriculture?" the politicians asked Mr. Catheart. "Well," the editor responded, deliberately, this spring the grass came up green as usual. The little pigs immediately started to grow into hogs. The cows still gave mik."

Mr. Catheart paused, and the politicians asked inquiring-ly for an explanation. "In other words," he went on, "the basic resources of America are still here. The people are still here, better prepared than ever to use their hands and their hearts as a result of their ordeal in the depression.

The pitticians present in the depression.

The politicians pressed him for details as to what the government ought to do. "Government can clear some of the obstacles to progress." declared Mr. Catheart. "The farmers are giving the government their continued confidence. Let it do its utmost—but the most that should be hoped for is a return to conditions under which a man, willing to go about his work intelligently and conscientiously, can expect a reasonable reward for his efforts. Then it is up to the farmers—all of us—to pitch in for ourselves."

REMOVING BILLBOARDS

Conforming with the long established policy of keeping the state highway rights-of-way free from advertising signs, the new administration has mapped out a program to extend this safety measure to village, town and city streets now inthis safety measure to village, town and city streets now in-corporated in the state's highway system. The program is being directed by the department of public works and build-ings in keeping with Gov. Horner's wishes to enhance the safety, comfort and beauty of the state's highway system and ties up with the state's plan to plant trees along many sections of the 13,000 miles of paved state and county roads. The following reasons justify the removal of any existing advertising signs, and the prevention of the erection of any adautonal signs;

1. They are hazardous; 2. they distract the attention of the driver from standard guide and warning signs; 3. they interfere with the proper display of legal guide, warning, distance signs and route markers; 4. they are objectionable to residents of the vicinity; 5. they utilize public property for personal gain; and 6. they are unsightly.

If you cannot do great things remember that you may do small things in a great way.
