STRIKES—WHO PAYS?

The milk strike which has provided novel experience for many persons of this community right here in the midst of a great dairy district is a source of many conflicting emotions.

The people of this community are overwhelmingly sympathetic towards the farmer and conscious of his economic problems, but many of them are not sympathetic towards strikes and picketing as weapons for any group of individuals. The strike is legal. Picketing is not. This is a ridiculous situation in that strikes are entirely ineffective without picketing.

Personally, we harbor the same distaste for strikes of any kind as the majority of persons who make up the "paying public" do. But we must admit that the farmer has paid higher prices for the things he buys many, many times because of strikes among labor groups, particularly among laborers who are employed in factories which make articles sold to farmers and among railroad employees who operate the trains which haul the farmer's produce. Higher freight rates have frequently resulted in lower net prices for farm products handled over railroads.

After all, what's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

We have heard the question asked; is this strike intended for the benefit of the farmer or is it intended for the benefit of the farmer. In other words, just what is the Pure Milk Association? It includes 18,000 farmer members, but is it not controlled by Borden's and Bowman's dairy companies and one or two other large dairy companies of Chicago? The small independent dairy companies seem to be the target of the whole battle. These independents claim they pay as high prices to the farmer as the larger Pure Milk association dairies do. They sell lower for cash and carry, take less for themselves and pay their employees less, according to their own claims. After all, the Chicago drivers who get $40 per week or even $35 per week are better paid than most farmer producers of the milk.

Another angle to this strike and any other strike—when the strikers win, the general public pays the bill. We remember watching two kids fighting one time with a third kid standing near as an innocent on-looker. Just about the time the battle began to turn against one of the lads, his mother arrived on the scene and herded him into the house. The other pugnacious chap, angered by the interruption to his victory, swung around and punched No. 3, the innocent on-looker, squarely on the end of the nose. In regard to the strikes, the general public is in much the same position as this lad No. 3.

THE SAME OLD PROBLEMS

If former American statesmen, long passed from this earthly scene, are able to look back, they must feel homesick as they view the events and problems which have troubled the country in recent months.

One striking parallel is the certainty with which our great national expositions, planned far in advance, fall in lean years. The Philadelphia Centennial Exposition of 1876 suffered severely from the effects of the 1873 panic; the Columbian Exposition of 1893 in Chicago was badly handicapped by the hard times of that period. Last year's Century of Progress had to deal with a similar situation.

At this stage of the game, when no one can say with certainty just what will happen next, it is comforting to know that both of the earlier great expositions were followed, within a few years, by greater prosperity than had preceded them.

The greenback problem, which split the nation at the time of the Philadelphia celebration, was officially ended two years later, in January, 1879, when the government resumed specie payments. Free silver, the burning issue of the early 90's, was talked out in the 1896 campaign, and by 1898 the country was prosperous enough to consent to a new war.

No one can see very far ahead in these days, but it is certain that millions were as worried and perplexed in 1876 and in 1893 as millions are today. Apparently governments, like men, never forget and never learn.—Duluth Herald.

OLD FRIENDS VALUABLE

John Wanamaker, the great Philadelphia and New York merchant, said many wise things in his day, chief among which was his thought on old friendships, expressed in the following: "Don't let old friendships be easily broken. Try to cement them more and closer as time goes on. Neither prosperity nor poverty should alter the relation of old friends. It is human for us all to make mistakes. We have all to cross the same bridge sooner or later if we expect to be forgiven." Shaken down, as we have been by the economic depression, we perhaps realize as never before that there are only a few things that count, vitally and forever. One of those things is a continuing friendship. No man has too many friends, if they are of the right variety. And just now when everything else vanishes like the morning dew before a rising sun, it is a wise citizen who puts a high value on his friendships, and who takes care to see that none of those friendships are broken.—Daily Gazette, Stillwater, Minn.

A Place of Refuge

In the ancient days there was a place of refuge provided for the thoughtless sinner. Here he might dwell with safety until he could be judged by the congregation. No hand might touch him while he lived within the walls of his city of refuge.

These older children need the quiet of their rooms. If they have to share the room each can have only one window and the door will be closed to control over himself. It teaches him to find strength within himself.

Little children have to be kept close to their mothers, for they are the only source of refuge for them.

While these are the only sources of refuge for the children, these emotions are manifested. These emotions frequently overflow the dams and cause sorrow and distress. At such times the place of refuge is a blessed place for the child and those about him.

When little ones lose control of himself and his mother and run away, ought to be a place of refuge for everyone of us so that we might re-mit to meditate upon our errors and amend them for the better. These emotions are manifested. These emotions frequently overflow the dams and cause sorrow and distress. At such times the place of refuge is a blessed place for the child and those about him.

The tired mother needs the quiet of her room. Her husband fathers need to find a place where when they drop their heads to sleep, their children must have a safe retreat where the hand of the law cannot reach them, a place where justice must stand outside the door.

WHAT'S GOING ON IN WASHINGTON

The blue eagle will be permanently over a self-governing American industry, Congress now accepts the recommendation of President Roosevelt. Mr. Roosevelt has taken the federal government to continue indefinitely a close supervision over industry, but without arbitrary direction. At present the national recovery administration is building a supervisory system, but under the law it's life ends June 16, 1933. Congress will be asked to make that life longer. But confidence may in vote changes. Senator Borah and Senator Keyes, of the Senate, and President Roosevelt are in a determination to see that the small business man is protected under the new system of self-government.

If the federal debt during the next two years above the $31,000,000,000 set as a maximum by President Roosevelt, officials in Washington think that the government will have to pay more money to roll.
