Detailed Information on Sea Birds Given by Speaker at Bird Club

"We can place all sea birds in two divisions, the divers and swimmers and sea fliers," Mrs. S. W. Gregory told members of the Barrington Bird club at their April meeting.

"The first represents a very ancient type of life. To this group belong the penguins, elder ducks and sea geese. The penguins, which there are several varieties, may justly be called wonderful birds. For countless generations the sea has been their home and refuge. The largest is the emperor penguin of the Antarctic Sea, and the smallest the little blue penguin, found in South Australia."

Concerning elder ducks, the speaker said, "although elder ducks constitute a considerable portion of the wealth of the countries they inhabit, they are not so much cared for and protected as they might be. The consequence is that in Spitzbergen and other localities where the sale of elder down used to be reckoned by the hundred weight, it is now reckoned only by pounds. In Greenland, Iceland and Norway it is very abundant and is preserved with the utmost strictness. According to the usual reckoning, a dozen nests yield a pound of raw material."

In sea fliers, she recognized the pelicans of the ocean. Their great characteristic is the enormous development of their wings. Their domain is the ocean, their territory the widest stretches of the sea. They are preys of storm birds and albatrosses.

Storm petrels are met with in all parts of the world. They are supposed to be seen only before a storm and so are not welcomed by sailors who call them "devil's birds."

Mrs. Gregory dwelt at length on the albatross. It is the largest sea bird, sometimes measuring eleven feet across the wings and is renowned for its majestic flight. She then read extracts from "The Ancient Mariner" in which Coleridge tells the story of the Mariner who shot an albatross, following his ship and was cursed until he learned to love living things.

During an open discussion following the paper, one member reported he had seen nine kinds of ducks in this locality since Jan. 1st. Observations had been made of blue birds, purple martins, sparrows, hawks, night hawks, and morning doves.

Names for U. S. Boats

The river gunboats which protect our interests along the Yangtze river in China, are named after our island possessions, such as the U. S. Guam. The mine sweepers are named after birds and there is a good number of them. The U. S. Bobolink being one. The oil tankers derive their names from the cities of the world, such as the U. S. S. Medusa. Ships like the U. S. S. Medusa are named after mythical persons or places. Indian tribe names are used in naming our ocean tugs—U. S. S. Sonoma. The U. S. S. Nitro is the name of an ammunition ship and our hospital ship is called the U. S. S. Relief.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Carmichael and sons Donald and James, 520 Division street, spent the weekend with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Alverson at Madison, Wis.

Mr. and Mrs. George Landwer and daughter Eunice called on Mrs. Sophia Landwer who is ill at the home of a daughter in Illinois last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Nellie Dunlea, 130 W. Main street, spent several days last week at the home of her daughter Mrs. Harry Moore in Chicago.

Birth

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Tuguel, 115 Harrison street, are the parents of a son born at Barrington General hospital April 18.

I wish to express my sincere appreciation to the voters of Barrington for the support given me at the election April 17.

Review History of Scout Cabin Nearly Final

vision of John L. Bell, land architect. Each scout troop held regular meetings hours each week so there will be no night in scout activities. It was noted.

To review the history of the project: boy and girl scout troops in Barrington had needed a suitable home for a long time. The money was available but not reported. When the program was launched by the local government last autumn, village board of Barrington in search for suitable property to provide work for the local unemployed. They decided to build and remodel the village hall, needed an additional community project to employ more men.

At that time, a member of Barrington district committee the Northwest Suburban Boy Scouts of America, Inc., William, conceived the idea of building a scout cabin in the southeast corner of South Side Park on Hough street. The board of trustees of the village was to be built, maintained for the convenience and exclusive use of "scouts" and kindred organizations. The building erected must be presentable buildings.

Architect Norman T. Maxon was then approached by a scout cabin of present design could be assured. The architect offered to plan, design and supervise the civil project. He drew the plans, figured the building material required, estimated the hours of labor and to complete the project with a labor. The project was then taken over by the Barrington board and accepted as part of their program for local work.

No money being available building material, it was planned to ask for donations of money material to complete the cabin in order to render project readily acceptable to the headquarters in Chicago. Barrington citizens met on Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 28, to pass and sign the following resolution:

"We, the undersigned citizens of the Village of Barrington, hereby endorse the accompanying project for a scout cabin to be built on the southeast corner of South Side Park, and we pledge our support and cooperation in the project."

The project was then taken over by the Barrington board and accepted as part of their program for local work.
