Pump and Shovel

KITCHEN toil—long hours in a poorly equipped, hor room has been banished forever by the forward march of progress. The wood-burning stove, the basement cooler, the pump at the sink have passed. In their stead have come the automatic range, the modern refrigerator and the sanitary plumbing system. Pump and shovel—these symbols of a byzone day—are no longer to be found in the truly modern home. The shovel—symbol of hours, of furnace worries and basement drudgery—has been displaced by a little thermostat on the wall—the only thing you need to regulate the temperature of your home when you have gas heat.

Heating with gas in the modern Heating with gas in the modern Heating with gas heat, due is soot, and dirt. Gas heat is automatic, gas heat is automatic. Gas heat is automatic, Gas heat is automatic Gas heat is clean. And it is so easy. No running up and down basement stains at all hours to tend furnace. You fire your favorice easy chair. No grime to cover curtains and walls. No dirty smudge to make woodwork harder to clean. In this modern day the shovel—like the old-fash-ioned kitchen pump—has no place in your home now that gas heat rates are so low. Get the facts at once.
