BUREAUCRATS' BACK-SEAT DRIVING

While American industry is apparently in the mood to cooperate with the administration there is a growing con-viction that it would progress more rapidly on the rough viction that it would progress more rapidly on the rough road to recovery if it were not for so much back-sact driving. The man behind the wheel is having a hard time and his job is all the more difficult by the instructions from the back seat bureaus, boards and committees. Granting that they are well intentioned, they are not so familiar with the road seat bureaus, boards and committees. Granting that they are well intentioned, they are not so familiar with the road as the driver.

Recovery is being held back by a program of "reform" which, like so many reform movements in the past, goes to an extreme which defeats its own purpose. Some of the brain trusters have evidently gone rampant on the idea that they must "protect" the consumers of the country. This protection is to be by standardization of everything they buy. Even food is included in the plans for grading and standardizing which is further evidence that the back-seat drivers do not know much about the road.

It is one thing to create standards for industrial goods purchased by experts. It is another thing to standardize consumer goods, which are purchased on individual, irrational and emotional motives, whims, and prejudices. Yet we are told that standardization of foods, of all things, is believed not only possible but logical, by these crusading back-seat drivers.

It is seriously proposed that we should buy all our canned drivers.

It is seriously proposed that we should buy all our canned or manufactured food under standard grade labels. These labels would carry official governmental grade symbols to indicate quality.

It is easy enough to set up standards for purity but it.

It is easy enough to set up standards for purity but it is fantastic to try and fix standards for such elusive qualities as flavor. Taste is something that cannot be graded in a labratory or factory or cannery.

The manufacturers, packers and canners of foods—especially fruits and vegetables—have not made great progress during the past thirty years to give consumers better quality at resonable prices. No food manufacturer or distributor, who puts his name or brand on his product can afford to put out an inferior quality if he is to continue in business. The housewife buys according to the likes and dislikes the family and the amount she can spend for feeding

The housewife buys according to the likes and dislikes of her family and the amount she can spend for feeding them. Racial habits, geographic conditions, occupations of the bread carner and his standard of living—all these things are factors in the purchase of food. What one family would not touch would make a feast for another. Food is an individual matter—outside of state institutions—and until individuals are standardized it is about as impossible to grade-label all food stuffs as it would be to standardize 120,000,000 meals three times a day or standardize ple and cake.

Let the government assure purity of product by factory

Let the government assure purity of product by factory Let the government assure purity of product by factory and cannery inspection; let us insist on honesty in labeling and in advertising food products. By doing this it will give all the "protection" the consumer needs. Attempting anything more would be impractical and doomed to failure the same as all "reforms" that go ridiculous extremes. We believe the canning industry is meeting the trend of the times by proposing to tell purchasers of their products all about the products, by means of the label. More power to them.—Citizen, LaGrange, Ill.

BAD MONEY

Bankers everywhere, as well as careful business men, are closely scrutinizing all the paper money proffered them by patrons in payment of accounts. This unusual care must needs be exercised because of the fact that more than a milneeds be exercised because of the fact that more than a million dollars worth of spurious money has been floated in the United States, and it is being found, everywhere, in the hands of innocent persons who must suffer a loss when they discover the money in their possession is counterfeit. This spurious money is being printed in the east and is being marketed in the central west. It is usually bought for 30 cents on the dollar and is then disposed of by crooks who travel from city to city, making small purchases of merchandise and paying for it with a spurious bill and receiving good money in change.
