Wolves as Lone Hunters

Some wolves are lone hunters—

recoiled. A few of this category are lone, a western type, hunter built and with a better and more massive build than the timber species. These veterans of the plains are snow white with age.

Guesswork and Farm Profits

The farmer with a telephone need not guess or take chances—he can call up and find out. By using his telephone and eliminating guesswork in buying, selling and other important details of farm management, he saves many trips and avoids many of the disadvantages which may threaten the results of his work.

Wherever the farm telephone comes and saves above the small cost of the service is profit to the farmer—profit he otherwise might not make. And, as every farmer knows, this is not the only value of his telephone. For the security of his family and the protection of his property it is priceless.

French Colony Founded

By Slave Ship Negroes

Galatia is a French colony on the west coast of Africa at the Equator. Its capital is Libreville. In 1849, states a writer in the Washington Post, a French man-of-war, cruising in African waters, overhauled a ship loaded with negroes bound for America. At that period the slave trade was forbidden and the French captain ordered the slaves ashore. Under the protection of the French guns, the negroes were freed and as they were far from their own homes they decided to settle down in the French colony. With the help of the French they built Libreville, which means "free town," and this became the capital of all the surrounding region of Gabon. Galatia lies directly on the Equator and is one of the four colonies of French Equatorial Africa. It is a typical jungle country and contains all kinds of bird, animal and reptile life. The gorilla was first captured there.

South of Libreville the Ogive river runs through a rich country with mahogany trees.

The Man From Yonder

circle of bright dawn McManus seemed to snuggle close to Able Armilage, face pulled even under the ruddy glow of flames. Her eyes followed just one figure; that of Ben Elliott, Commanding, resourceful, a human being, he was. Shortly after midnight the supply team drove up from camp, the cook drew back blankets which had covered its burden, commenced putting generous pieces of steaming steak between slices of bread and the cook poured coffee from humpots for the men who swarmed around the sleigh.

Back to the decks in the woods went the locomotive; down it came again, bearing more logs. These were let down to a pile which rose almost to the track level. When it was three feet higher nearly half the work would be finished.

Workers staggered through the snow leaving a steel rail. It went into place; fish plates clattered; wrenches set nuts and spikes put the rail secure on ties.

So when the locomotive, leading steam from its glands, lumbered down with its not burden, the locomotive was set out on this length of new track and began the task of filling in the far side of the ravine, leaving a shuteaway through which the waters of the stream gurgled and surged.

Blackmore joined Able and Dawn on the bank where the freight struck loose lights from the snow. The old justice turned an inquiring gaze on him and the buyer shrugged.

"Two o'clock," he muttered, "it's got less than six hours left to turn the trick."

"It doesn't seem humanly possible," Able said slowly.

"I'm beginning to think," Blackmore replied, "that the man isn't human. This thing would've stopped most men I know without a try. But not Elliott."

Daybreak found them throwing the last load of logs into place and the pallid light of the early day revealed Elliott's face, drawn and gaunt and colorless; his eyes burned brightly, strangely dark.

"His only chance is that the locomotive will be here," Blackmore moaned to Able.

Six o'clock, and broad ayes shaped the logs on which the ties would rest, and up from the siding came a team at a trot, and behind it another. These were men from Tincup who had heard of the work going on. They left their sleighs and looked at the emergency trestle and then stared at one another and shook their heads in amazement. Things like that just didn't happen, they seemed to be thinking.

Then came a battered cutter, with old Tim Jeffers driving alone, to see what was to be seen.

"Heard the shots in town last night," he told Able. "Come morning I drove this way."

The old justice nodded grimly. You guessed, then?

The old justice nodded grimly. The old justice nodded grimly. The old justice nodded grimly.

The gap was bridged, the last spikes were going in; the particular job was done, but tension screwed up and up, as a sudden string is tightened.

It was seven-thirty, and far off a locomotive screamed.

"The local!" Blackmore gasped. "She's at Dixon. . . . in a half hour, now. It's the boys' ticket!"

A half hour! A half hour in which to move six standard cars laden with a heavy scale of saw logs over that grade? Two trips, Ben Elliott had estimated it would take. Two trips for the leading locomotive to drag them the three miles to the siding and put it away back and trundle the other three over the hill and down the slope. It was a half mile climb from river summit with a better than four per cent grade. A good locomotive of even small tonnage might take them over at once; but not the old train that stood sending its plume of smoke into the morning air up the track yonder. And if those logs were not put down for the train even now screaming its way toward the siding, Ben Elliott was beaten.

He straightened, flinging away his mail, gave the last nut tightened on the final fish plate and then holding up both hands, face fixed toward the locomotive with its staccato of cars waiting around the bend and up the hill to the northward, he began to run.

Holding them there? When the trestle was ready? Men wondered why, suddenly, excitedly, stirred from their weariness by this strange move. Instead of high-balling them on, Elliott was holding them back!

Hatje Asks That Water Department Audit Be Finished

Trustees Pass Motion; Al Maloney for Status of Legal Cases

The village attorney, David J. Maloney, has been instructed by the board of trustees to prepare the following items of information:

A list of all cases and matters in which he represents the village.

The present status of each case. The amount of time spent by the village attorney on each case.

The above information was asked in a motion offered by Trustee Al Hatje and passed unanimously by the board.

Mr. Hatje also made two other important motions which were passed by the board. One was that the village board request the recently adopted act of the state relating to occupational sales tax on purchases of material and supplies.

Mr. Hatje pointed out that this policy was unfair to leaders who could not afford to shoulder the burden of absorbing a 2 per cent tax which was originally meant to be passed on to the consumer.

The other motion was that the village treasurer be authorized to continue his audit of the financial relationship between the village general fund and the water account. Mr. Hatje wants to determine if the large consumers are charged enough to pay for the water they use.

Last summer the village board instructed the treasurer to prepare an audit of the water account so that it could be determined if the village were selling water to some consumers at a loss while selling to others at a profit. (This possibly was the result of the sliding scale of charging on quantity, water distribution.)

Mr. Hatje pointed out that a preliminary audit completed by the treasurer which indicated that the cost of production was less than the rate paid on large quantity consumption.

A second audit was started by the treasurer working in conjunction with a committee from Jew Tea Co., headed by Allen C. Jew, assistant treasurer of the company.

The audit was never completed. In that connection Mr. Hatje wrote the following letter to Mr. Hunt of February 11:

"Dear Mr. Hunt: Recently the village board requested your kind office to cooperate with the village treasurer in our effort to ascertain the true cost of water to village water users."

"Will you please advise if you desire to continue in this audit? If you are of the opinion that the report of the village treasurer may be accepted as being a correct statement of the facts in the matter?"

Local Boy Scouts Exhibit in Three Business Windows

Barrington's three boy scout troops have arranged special exhibits in the show windows of three firms in the business section of the village. The exhibits are in conjunction with the local troops' observance of the twenty-fifth anniversary week of the founding of the Boy Scouts of America.

The exhibits represent the activities of the scouts and demonstrate many of their achievements. The results of the exhibits are brought out in several basic some wood carvings.

The various troops have exhibits in the following business: Troop 10, (Cadwallader Jewelry store; troop 21, S. L. Ohly and Sons clothing store; troop 29, A. H. Sars Hardware store.
