Death of Tidal Theory
The theory of tidal evolution, first elaborated by Sir George Darwin late in the Nineteenth century, predicted that the earth and moon evolved from a single liquid body which rotated on its axis in less than 24 hours. In this condition, this body was very oblate and the motion of its particles was continually disturbed by tides raised upon it by the sun. This motion, which is greater, certainly, than the mean motion of the tides, and this vibration caused a portion of the body to be separated from the remainder.

Music for "Roberto,"
Playing at Ernsager,
by Famous Composer

"Which came first, the words or the music?" is a matter of as much speculation as the one about the hen and egg.

When Jerome Kern writes the music, however, the question need not arise. Kern, whose melodies grace the Max Gordon musical comedy, "Roberto," written with Otto Harbach, has a gift for attuning his score so perfectly to the play, that words and music flow along as an inseparable whole.

This is no happy accident. It is the result of the arduous apprenticeship to Kern's art.

He studied the principles of musical composition at Heidelberg, and pedaled songs around the theatres of London, before he was ever known in this country.

In his early days, the young composer was engaged by Charles Frohman and Klaw and Erlanger to write incidental music for various imported musical comedies. Kern's name did not appear on the program, but those interpolated numbers became the hits of the show.

His first recognition as a composer came with "The Girl From Utah," in 1914. Followed a long series of such popular successes as "Very Good, Eddie," "Leave It to Jane," "Oh Boy," "Oh Lady, Lady," and "Good Morning, Dearie."

Later, "Sweet Adeline," "Show Boat," "Sweet Adeline," "The Wizard of Oz," "The Wizard of Oz," "Music in the Air," etc.

For the last decade, Jerome Kern's music has been whistled and played all over the land. It has that whistable quality, and it has something more.

That "something more" is Kern's orchestration, which captures the mood and action of a scene in perfect synchronization. The flip of a powder-puff, the click of a typewriter, the tap of a foot, all are embodied in the score. Passion, humor, romance, all are clearly suggested in the incidental music.

This tendency of Kern's towards an almost operatic completeness may be seen increasing with each new offering from his talented pen.

With "Roberto," created and produced by the trio of names—Jerome Kern, Otto Harbach and Max Gordon—the musical genius of Kern reaches its peak.

Poem, Written in Penitentiary, Is Sent to Dentist

A set of state license plates, packing papers of which revealed something of an inmate of the state penitentiary at Joliet, were received by Dr. E. A. Beerman, local dentist, a few days ago.

The fragment of a poem was scrawled on one of the plates that was passed between the two plates for shipping.

"I have known heartache and weeping,
Sorrow, pain and regret,
Through all the trials I have met."

"It is worth all the sorrow,
To know—"

The poem broke off suddenly but was signed by the prisoner. His low number, 899, indicates the possibility that he had been in the penitentiary for many years. "Crime don't pay" was written on one corner of the paper.

continuing the clearing house will go up to the merchants. Many feel that to continue the clearing house on a 5 per cent basis would mean a nuisance without sufficient benefit.

It has been suggested that the clearing house be expanded so that it accept an additional 10 per cent assignment from the depositors and operate on a 15 per cent basis.

In the short life of the original clearing house a total of $321,176 of deposits was assigned. Of this amount, $252,000 was received from stores, professional men, etc., in payment for merchandise and services. Those depositors who have not spent all of their assignments will receive checks for half of the balances they still carry in the clearing house for more than two years.

DISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH

Many peddlers of economic panaceas, while recognizing that wages and living standards of workers have increased, nevertheless contend that this increase has not been sufficiently rapid, and that workers as a group receive too small a proportion of the total national income, and that this proportion has been declining.

They have been misled by unsupported and inaccurate statements to believe that the great bulk of the national income, which is the net volume of goods and services produced by the nation within a year, goes to a very small percentage of our population, the implication being that this small group consists of a few owners and investors in our industrial enterprises.

For instance, a government official of high position stated in a public address that 2 per cent of our people receive 80 per cent of the national income. An impartial study of the available facts discloses the fallacy of this statement. Only about 40 per cent of those composing the total population receive any direct income, the other 60 per cent being children, women, and dependents. Reliable data shows that 80 per cent of the national income, instead of going to 2 per cent of the population, is in fact shared by 60 per cent of those who receive direct income.

Figures taken from a number of studies and reports, including the department of commerce, show that the share of the national income paid out as compensation to employees was 38 per cent in 1850, that it had risen to 54.4 per cent in 1909, and to 65 per cent in 1929. The increase in the share of the national income paid to employees was greater than the increase of employees, both in numbers and as a percentage of the population.

This larger income was received in payment for fewer hours of work. Thus, between 1909 and 1929, while the share of the national income received by employees increased 20 per cent, hours of work declined from an average of 57 per week in 1909 to about 50 in 1929—a reduction of more than 12 per cent.

HOME EDUCATION

"The Child's First School is the Family"—Froebel

Issued by National Kindergarten Assn. 8 W. 40th St. New York

Examining Child Prejudices

When pressed for a reason, he said the workman had told him that a human lived in the bottom of the ocean, and reached out with a hook to catch people who came near when the cover was removed. "He told me that he saw the man reach out the hook this morning," said the terrified child, "and he might catch you."

The mother need only repeat the same story, and the child would take the frightened lassies and lowered it into the center of the room, so that the boy could see that it was entirely empty. The man had not wanted to be bothered with the child who, like all children, was curious to know what was going on, so he had taken the easiest way, according to his manner of thinking, to keep him away from the cistern.

By encouraging the children to point out the bad and call them like or dislike certain foods or clothes or plays or errands, parents can get a great deal of information that will astonish them. To be sure, there are imaginary dislikes, but usually the real reason is in the child's mind, and a violent prejudice exists, and it is the duty of mother or teacher to find out what misleading information or foolish belief is back of it all, and then to use the same amount of patience and concern in re-education in which these will be respected, not felt. The point is also brought out that a prejudice will make anyone an unwelcome visitor in many homes. It pays to examine such a concept carefully and find wise, practical ways of overcoming the difficulties.

A little girl detected needles and could not be persuaded to eat them. "Billy told me that they are good for you," she said, "but when her mother coaxed from her the reason why she would not eat them. Then it was easy to take her to the kitchen and show her how the needles were made and eat them. The mother would drop them into the chicken broth to make sure that the teething little boy next door was all right in his idea about the good food.

Another child had been told that there was no light in the room at night. "Dad, long arms" reached out from behind the furniture to grab naughty children. When her mother learned of this she first assured him that she had a very naughty child. Then she had all the matured to show that her no-body lurked behind it, and besides this a little light was left in her room night after night until the delusion died out. Careful parents may be to protect their children from groundless fears, there are always older children or carefree friends who think nothing of frightening them.

A little boy wanted his mother to promise that she would not go near an open cistern where a man was repairing the top, and

WHAT'S GOING ON

(Courtesy The United States News)

Periods of greater instead of less uncertainty seem to be in the offing.

Undismayed by the fact that the treasury is running in the red at unprecedented figures and the public and business and other sources have still failed to bring equilibrium to the 16,000,000 persons out of jobs, the administration embarks on more "reforms." The control of corporations and the control of credit and bank deposits now sought

The threat to investments is ignored. The business and economic structure, it is reasoned, can apparently stand any kind of surgery and live.

But while the forces of natural law, the law of recuperative power which America has shown in the last several months are bringing about certain forward movements, the tendency now is to reverse the process.

In the background is the supreme court of the United States. Its words have been and are being awaited with anxiety on all phases of the new deal's extraordinary seizure of power entirely apart from gold clause cases and the like.

The supreme court's decisions may have more to do with bringing back public confidence than any single act of the government in the last two years. For reaffirmation of the fact that law and right are right will be the supreme court's decision.

Bronchos Rout Eagles 28 to 26 in Three-Minute Overtime Thriller

Wichman Ties up Score After Rally Gives Leyden Lead

Final Period Played With Three Local Regulars on Side Lines

Barrington high school's basketball team successfully withstood Leyden's last quarter rally to win 28 to 26 in a three minute overtime game at the local gymnasium Friday night. Barrington chalked off its ninth consecutive victory as the conference schedule completed its third third.

After trailing 17 to 8 one minute before the half and appearing hopelessly outclassed, the Eagles broke through Barrington's defense and managed a string of 10 points within three points of their hosts. With the opening of the second half Leyden gave Barrington a brief competition to the end. At the close of the third quarter the Bronchos were still leading 22 to 21, in the middle of the fourth quarter a single free throw by Leyden closed almost to the half at 22 all. Leyden took a 23 to 22 lead on a foul shot by Chapp, tall forward, a rough scoreless fight followed three minutes. Both teams had frequent wild shots at the basket. Fouls were numerous, but throws were few. Leyden, Ladd, and Leyden, Ladd, fouled out, was replaced by Hake, Latta, and Hake, Latta, were the only single fives in Barrington's

Breaks Tie

With Leyden's victory over regulation only a matter of a few seconds, Wilfred Wichman, local coach, reserve guard, dropped a few free throws, tall forward, in the middle of the second at 21 all, before the game was reported.

After the three minute overtime and that followed Overline and Leyden each sank a long shot that was followed by one on Chapp of Leyden, closing the game 28 to 26.

Barrington's first half margin was largely to the shooting of Leyden, Ladd, who sank four goals in his characteristic hand manner. He hooked them over his shoulder from the center of the floor, baffling Leyden's defense.

Barrington's lightweights were overwhelmed 44 to 26 in the Friday night's opening. Accuracy in shooting goals was the chief factor for Leyden's tremendous victory. Steingraber and Long engaged for 23 points alone. Leyden was Barrington's leading scorer with three field goals and six free throws.

The Man From Yonder

Sitting off and in minutes the train slid in, brakes grinding. "What stut go?" the conductor called, swinging down from the way car.

"That stut goes?" Ben said at most reverently and turned to face Tim who was filling his pipe with untidy hands.

It was the moment for the right word. But Tim Jeffers was not a man of words; not of many words.

"Well, you done it," he said simply.

"Yeah. With your help?" "Gimme needin' a camp boss?" "Yeah."

"'Tpose I'd do?" "Do! Lord, Tim, if—"

"All right. I'm hired to get out logs again. Guess I'll hit Mr. Bullock for a cuppa coffee. I've rode to him before. I'll be back. I'll be off all the sides I ever took that was what you might call 't dangdest."

In a Minnesota lumber town before he sat near the stove in a small hotel and heard the story of what was happening in distant Tincup.

"Know him?" another listener asked the narrator.

"Not the kid. I know Brandon, the son of Tim Jeffers. Top load for him this winter. If Tim's back there's a hot scrap on and on... gosh! but I like scrap."

"Mean you're pullin' for Tim-cup?"

"I say I am."

The bearded man cleared his throat.

"You think, then, that it's against Brandon?" asked.

"I sure do, as if he had a chance. With old Timcup shanty boys biting back for their stamping grounds his chances are getting better. Ever been in Tincup, Martin?"

The other closed the blade of his pocket knife and pulled at the lobes of his left ear with his hand.

"I've heard of the place," he said quietly.

"Better hold your turkey and come along with me. Likely we come along for a price for a good bookkeeper."

Martin smiled oddly but made no other response.

In far flung camps and mill towns the story was being repeated, just such men were leaving jobs and turning their faces toward Tincup,

Kelsey Charges Excessive Waste in State Relief

Cuba Supervisor Represents State Group Before General Assembly

The administration costs of distributing Illinois Emergency relief benefits in Cuba township sometimes totals as high as $400 per month and is excessively greater than the administration costs of poor relief under the old system, H. D. Kelsey of Barrington declared in testifying before a joint session of the general assembly at Springfield Tuesday.

Mr. Kelsey, chairman of the Lake county board of supervisors, and James Cannell of Rockford, supervisor of Winnebago county, were selected by the House to represent the state to represent the state in a campaign to reduce the cost of I.E.R. administration by eliminating waste and graft. The supervisors met at Springfield February 13 to crystallize their campaign. At that meeting they selected Mr. Kelsey and Mr. Cannell to represent the state to the campaign before the legislature. The motion delivered pointed addressed at the joint session Tuesday.

Mr. Kelsey told the legislature that girls just out of school are hired at salaries of $125 a month to administer the relief. He said the girls are not efficient and cannot possibly understand the needs of destitute families as well as administer the relief needs as efficiently as could married men or women.

Administration of relief is a matter of great importance, he said, to destitute persons and not a matter of creating high salaried jobs for men and women to do the work, he said. In this connection Mr. Kelsey said that in some districts of the state (notably Chicago) relief officials get as high as $500 per month salary and that the money is being spent into the funds which should be spent for the necessities of life for poor and destitute families.

In Lake county the poor relief was formerly administered by the town superintendents at a cost of $25 per month, which is small compared to the $400 and more per month now spent.

The I.E.R. in many cases has failed to reward the Bogardis act and has treated needy war veterans as paupers. Mr. Kelsey told the members of the assembly. He urged the state legislators to investigate the administration of relief and graft and bring its benefits from it to the families needing it.

Review Is Printed Earlier Because of Holiday Friday

Due to the fact that there will be no earlier delivery in Barrington Friday, a legal holiday, the Review went to press Thursday morning this week in order that the issue might be delivered the afternoon of the same day. Had the paper been printed the usual time, Thursday night, its reader would not have received it until the morning delivery Saturday.

Next week the paper will be printed for Friday delivery as usual.

Main street, was given a blood transfusion of approximately one pint Tuesday morning as an effort to aid his recovery from a combination of kidney disease and encephalitis. Rev. H. L. Eagle, pastor of the Methodist Epscopate church, was the donor of the blood.

Earl rallied slightly after the transfusion, but his condition remained serious late Wednesday according to Dr. Joseph Wadsworth who is attending the patient at the Sherman hospital, Elgin. The disease is not contagious.

Seventeen high school boys volunteered to give their blood in answer to an announcement Tuesday morning by Superintendent known through the Lake states for the tyranny that Nicholas Brandon had exercised there so many years.

Ben, sitting with his feet on Able's desk in the Justice's office, grimly admitted as he told of the grim development: "I know what that means."

"Sixty-four men in camp this morning," he said. "Over thirty of 'em new and the best looking bunch of loggers I've seen since I was a kid."

Able glanced at a letter he had been holding.

"And with the Milwaukee people standing ready to finance us it looks as if you might, perhaps, be getting ready to find it all right and ready. Hell, I think that I'm the best part of the paper bank is the best piece of work you've done yet."

"Nothing, Able. All I have to show was what we were doing. They can't lose with the lumber behind them."

"Upset Brandon finds a way."

"You've got to watch every loop-hole, Benny. And you've got too much for one man to do."

"Oh, it's not that bad. Things are straightening out. Tim's a wonder; Bullock isn't missing a beat. We ought to keep right on step."
