THE TAX EXEMPTION FALLACY

The surest way to achieve tax reduction would be to spread the hurden evenly, based on the capacity to pay—without exemptions.

mithout exemptions.

Tax exemption for persons with incomes in the lower brackets has long fooled a substantial part of the public into believing it is not taxed at all. It creates the idea that the cost of government is being borne by wealthy individuals and by his hallow. and by big businesses.

No idea, no belief, could be less justified. There aren't many wealthy individuals—and there aren't that many big businesses. The great part of the cost of government—federal, state, county and municipal—is paid by the people who think they are tax exempt. Instead of paying their money directly to the tax collector's office, they pay it in-rectity to higher rents, more expensive food, clothing and entertainment and everything else. That big business which is so highly taxed, for example, is the business you patronize when you buy groceries or shoes or insurance or transportation or something of the kind—and the cost of the commodity or service includes the taxes the business pays. In other words, the business simply acts the middleman—it collects money from you and passes it on to government.

lects money from you and passes it on to government.

Today the tax problem is an intensely personal issue to every American. It stands in the way of employment, of wage increases, of industrial expansion, of productive inwestment. It is a barrier to recovery. It is going to become a bigger problem every year until the millions of wage-earners realize how vital its solution is to their well-being and their future.—Republican-Leader, Salem, Ind.
