CHILDREN'S CRIME HOUR

Listening, as we do, to repeated complaints of parents who object to the penny-dreadful type of broadcasting that comes over the radio to their children at supper time we wonder at the shortsightedness of many advertisers and ra-

Concern over this type of program finds reflection not only in the ill will of potential customers toward the spon-sors and the advertised product, but also in a statement by Anning S. Prall, chairman of the Federal Communications mmission. Mr. Prall is certain that some of the dime novels of the air are injuring children. And he offers the reminder that "about half a dozen stations have been taken off the air in recent years for failure to live up to the proper stan-air in recent years for failure to live up to the proper stan-dards of public service."

The resentment against this type of program is not of the negative sort that is received and forgotten with an in-different shrug; an embattled parent is a dangerous adver-sary for any institution, no matter how big, to face. School officials and educators in general have repeatedly emphasized the demoralizing effects of these programs. Highly strung children are keyed up to an uncomfortable pitch by radio shrieks and horror stories; and even the most phiegmatic child is apt to have his vocabulary corrupted and his stand-ards warped in formative years by what might well be des-cribed as the Children's Crime Hour.

Many of these programs are a nuisance to parents also,

Many of these programs are a nuisance to parents also and to a degree which it is hard for adults without children of their own to appreciate. Once a child's sympathy has been aroused by the sponsor of a product, it will plead and beg incessantly for the purchase of that product. In a current radio sequence, children were made to believe, though it was not actually stated, that purchase of a certain article would aid the fictional hero in securing money to pay for the necessary operation on his alling mother!

The sheer impudence of an appeal to any child in the home over the parents' heads, in behalf of an advertised product might be enough to give the sponsors pause; but combined with the ill effects of such programs upon the child, as shown by Professor Busse of New York University and others, and the resentment enkindled in grown-ups, it would seem that, even if advertisers do not, the radio powers that be would take heed in their own interest.-Christian
