

Early Treatment of Oats Cheapens Smut Prevention

Preparations for oats seed in Illinois are being made by the state pathologist of the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois, who says that farmers can save the cost of disinfecting their seed by treating it with a chemical dust before sowing. Although the state is still suffering from the effects of the winter record cold weather, it is expected to begin preparing for oats sowing, Koehler said. More than a third of the oats in Illinois are planted in March, and that is only a month away, he said. Treating seed two to three weeks ahead means that preparations must start now. The amount of the three or four million acres of oats seeded in the state this spring will be planted in seed treated with the new chemical, a preventive of smut damage to yield and quality is predicted. This disinfectant is available at most seed stores in a dry chemical dust which acts by contact and as a gas. If contact is made early and the seed is allowed to stand in a bin covered with canvas or blankets, the gas has time to act and thus less contact is needed, Koehler stated.

The usual recommended dose of the dust is a bushel, should be used on the oats. It is stored in a bin before sowing. It is also to be thought that if a little more is used, more will be effective. An excess weakens germination of the seed, and this is remedied by a little less of the grain. Well-cleaned grain—both clean and disinfected—should be stored in a bushel of seed, mixed and used to stand for two or more weeks before sowing. This gives good control of smut as one bushel is allowed to act for 24 hours.

Another factor affecting the amount of dust is the amount of water on the oats. If the seed has been washed, it will not be as effective. It should not be re-cleaned before the disinfectant is applied, a full one-half ounce of chemical to the bushel may be needed even though the seed is stored for some time before using.

Through mixing of the disinfectant with the grain it secures the best results in any case. Mixing done with a good machine gives more reliable results than that done with a scoop shovel. By cleaning and treating his seed and keeping in mind the length of time the oats will be stored after treating and before sowing, then adjusting the dosage of the disinfectant accordingly, the farmer not only will save money on disinfectants, but also will assure the best yields of grain.

Hair It, Not Hallow
A hair is not hollow but is a cylindrical shaft, with its root contained in a follicle, or deep depression in the skin. This is supplied by a gland which pours its secretion into the follicle, at the base of the hair. There is therefore no hole in the hair to be sealed by singeing.
