THERE is little difference in spirit between the pioneer chopping tim-ber for his new home in the wilderness and the modern couple scanning "Lots for Sale" ads, or consulting with architects.

After a home is established, it may grow and develop with the progressive fortunes of the family it shelters.

When the first baby is born, a family must move to larger quarters. "We'd like to get out of the apartment on account of the baby," they say. Step by step they go on planning and adding improvements to
