The Child and the World He Lives In

By LOIS SNEILING

"Since you have moved to New York," Lucy Parrish said to her cousin, who was visiting her in Chicago, "the twins are going to miss most of the things about which they talk so intelligently. A child in a big city doesn't get much chance to see the world's outdoor wonders. Mine know only their own home premises and the surrounding neighborhood."

Mabel French gave her a questioning glance. "But, my dear, Harold and I have spent practically all of our time in cities since the twins were born. I have seen the city and I have seen the country. Really?" Lucy exclaimed in surprise. "But the way they talk! Why, they know so much about things which my children are pathetically unfamiliar—birds and flowers and trees, animals, fish, and oh, all of the things that a country child enjoys and the city child doesn't know!"

"But haven't you ever heard the children speak of things that the city child knows and the country child doesn't?" questioned Mabel. "factories, museums, zoos, and so on."

"Yes, I have. Just this morning I heard John telling my Bernice about a trip he took through a big candy factory. Bernice probably didn't understand what he was talking about, for she has never been in a candy factory where she gets her sweets. I certainly wish, though that she and Ruth could talk about things the way John was describing that factory."

"They could, if they had a chance! Forgive me for being so frank, Lucy, but I saw as soon as I came here that you are making a mistake that so many parents make, one Harold and I have tried to avoid. I mean the mistake of not showing the children the wonders that are in the world. The wonders are everywhere, are they not? They are in the small town and the country. Harold and I have formed the habit of taking our children wherever we think they may find things of interest and learn worthwhile lessons. You say Bernice and Ruth know only the immediate neighborhood. Why, dear? You have a car! Why don't you show them some of the outstanding features of Chicago? My youngsters have learned more from an afternoon at a zoo than I could teach them in a week of lessons! And Jane is already interested in cooking, because she so loves to cook over a campfire."

"My girls never cooked over a campfire." Lucy mused, suddenly wistful. "We just never thought about it. They are still so small and—well—"

"Children are never too small to be introduced to the things that will interest and amuse," Mabel suggested. "Of course, interest cannot be forced, and its spontaneity depends on previous experience and also on mental age level."

A five-year-old and his twelve-year-old brother may be equally interested at the zoo, but their interests will differ. They should not forget that the young child's span of attention is short, and in planning trips on which he is to go, we should see that the possible interests and activities are many and varied. One trouble with waiting for boys and girls to "become older" before they are introduced to the woods with its birds and flowers and its campfire spirit, besides their present loss, is that they may grow up not to care for those things. You have seen people like that—both old and young! Never having gone out to seek for interesting things, they know nothing about them and care nothing. Naturally, they are never so interested, no matter how many colleges they may attend, as they would have been had they learned to take advantage of what lay around them."

"I want my children to have the very best education possible," Lucy declared. "I'm going to start right now. Where shall we go?"

"Well," said Mabel, "the twins once visited a big dairy with their Daddy and they came home telling me more about cows and milk than I had ever before. Suppose we had a dairy—it has interest for all development levels. The twins would like nothing better, and just watch your little girls!"
