enough punishment and quit.

Henry Meyers and Zak Adams were paired in the fourth bout and Adams was given the decision on points scored by a terrific right cross that nailed Meyers several times.

Tom Kennelly and Joe Howe fought the fifth bout in the 130-lb. division with Kennelly getting the decision without having to extend himself very hard. Kennelly worked hard on Howe's stomach to pile up his points.

Joe O'Connell, brother of Ed, repeated his brother's triumph by knocking out Vince Foggi in the sixth bout at 150 lbs. Joe dismantled the more characteristic hard-hitting powers of his brother. Foggi was an able opponent and it was only in the third that Joe landed a hard right to send Foggi through the ropes for the count.

The Leslie Hansens entertained at dinner Saturday night.

In the semi-windup Frank La

Porto won the decision from Ed Ronneger in the 130-lb. class.

The windup of the bouts saw a heavily backed favorite lose the decision in three rounds of hard fighting. Al Noto lost the decision to Johnny Polera in a bout which saw the boys throwing leather all the time.

The wrestling match between Hoffman and Riley started slowly with Hoffman giving the usual customary manner and in anxiety to make the match interesting, Hoffman knocked Riley in the stomach and knocked him out. Rather than let the match continue, Riley was given the decision.
