THROUGH SEVEN YEARS

Seven years have passed since the Day of Reckoning in October, 1929.

Seven years have elapsed since, as some of the clergy might say, the hand of God caused punishment to be visited on the Sodoms and Gomorrah of modern times.

Seven years have passed since the easy-going ways of the speculator with fascinating allurements drew millions to the ticker tape.

Seven years have passed since the high-pressure salesmen who sold bank stocks, and aviation stocks and equities in unsuitable skyscrapers found themselves confronted by the inexorable law of value, the down-to-earth calculation which coldly appraises wealth in terms of goods produced and not just imagined.

Less than seven years have passed since we began visiting our wrath on the "money changers" and on the "crooks" of big business and high finance with so little, ah so little, blame on ourselves as the true disciples of cupidity and selfishness who wanted not to earn but to get something for nothing.

When business breaks down, when savings are wiped out, when panic comes, the mood of a nation is one of reflection. The word "maladjustment" comes conspicuously into the vocabulary of the reformer who begins to urge at once a surgical operation on the economic body.

The symptoms might be simple immortality, simple lack of character, simple deviation from the laws of honesty and fair play. But, no, there must be something deeper, something malignant. Then come the nostrums.

Depressions furnish fertile ground for all the "isms" that mankind has for centuries considered, thrown away, reconsidered, and discarded again.

Over the cycles of time, there is but one true law of humanity—the law of nature. Nature makes us acquisitive, individualistic. It permits us to conform to discipline in the common interest but it does not rationalize us into equality, economic or otherwise. It does, however, breed in every man's breast ambition, hope, a striving for betterment of his standard of living both for himself and his family.

To protect man against man, to prevent injustice, social or economic, the state is established.

The moment the state becomes master and no longer servant of the people there is tyranny.

When the state decides that a small group of elected leaders can change economic law and repeal the laws of human nature, the seeds of rebellion are sown.

During the seven years just past we have witnessed in Europe the entire overthrow, for the time being, of the totalitarian state and we have witnessed in America the rise of a school of thought which believes the common man too weak to govern himself and in need, therefore, of an all-powerful and benevolent autocracy.—The United States News.

Home industry is getting underway on an expanding scale. But the utility industry, although power sales are expanding and in some cases taxing capacity to produce, has shown little inclination to start a broad program of the rebuilding of railroads which will rival the automobile boom of the 1920s for its effect on general industry.

These facts speak for themselves. After the Arlington game, which was the best game of the season from playing standpoint, the Bronchos are expected to give Lake Forest a stiff battle.

Saturday's Game The final six of the Bronchos again rolled up against them in the Arlington game Saturday at Arlington. While the Bronchos scored no points it was obviously the best game thus far this season. Saturday's score of 6 to 0 has followed the locals through the season but it is in fact the loudest sooner or later—probably sooner. Harrah kicked off for Arlington sending the leather deep into the Bronk's territory to Cadwallader, who brought it back for a short distance. Both teams based their advances mostly on punting and line plunges. The Cards kept the piekin' well into Barrington territory during the first quarter. The Cards were going strong, too, to some excellent interference. The period ended with the ball on the locals' 15 yard line.

Cards Score The Cards made their first down but with difficulty through the Bronk line. Through fast plays the Cards worked the ball deep into the opponents territory. The Bronchos then punted to the equalizer. Arlington punted and recovered a fumble by Barrington on the 15 yard stripe. Mueller, Card right half, broke through the locals' tackle to score. The Cards kicked for the extra point but the ball was too low and to one side. The Bronchos took the ball after the kick-off to Arlington's 25 yard mark. A pass was attempted

LOYALTY Is A Proof of Character

Charles E. Mason Candidate for Re-election as State's Attorney

Has Proven that He Possesses These Qualities

* He never has been disloyal to the People of Lake County who elected him to office.

* HE NEVER HAS BEEN DISLOYAL TO HIS PARTY.

* He never has been disloyal to his friends.

Prosecution and Not Persecution

While Mr. Mason has waged a determined fight against the criminal element in Lake County, he has conducted his office on the basis of prosecution and not persecution.

There is a vast difference between civil and criminal law. Mr. Mason's background, training, experience and practice have been in the criminal law.

Loyalty is his duty as State's Attorney and to the people in general makes it possible for him to point to a record of prosecution of criminal cases that has been equalled by few state's attorneys in Illinois.

RE-ELECT Charles E. Mason State's Attorney

Three situations of direct concern to business men dominate the official Washington scene at this time.

Uncertainty surrounds the effect of each, although the white house attitude is that at least two of the three developments will work out to the definite advantage of American business.

The other right now is causing an acute official headache, with chances that this headache will spread to employers next January.

In the immediate line-up are the following:

1. Administrative and policy problems surrounding the unemployment insurance and old-age insurance systems, with the time rapidly approaching when the now intangible words of the social security law take on a dollars-and-cents meaning.

2. Trade and currency problems growing from the latest realignment of gold standard currencies and the revived interest in tariffs.

3. Problems of adjustment of federal power distribution policies to fit into a possible cooperative arrangement with private utilities.

More than a market for TVA power—the White House feels—is involved in the negotiations underway between the government and private utility interests in the Tennessee valley.

The thought is this: If that situation can be straightened out short of a legal battle lost or won, then one important obstacle to pent-up utility plant expansion and utility re-financing may be removed.

The last depression log jam recently admitted has been centered in the heavy industries that depend on investment spending for their activity. It is in these industries that much unemployment lies.

Of late there has been stirring in the field of railroad equipment, with some officials predicting that the rebuilding of railroads will rival the automobile boom of the 1920s for its effect on general industry.

Home industry is getting underway on an expanding scale. But the utility industry, although power sales are expanding and in some cases taxing capacity to produce, has shown little inclination to start a broad program of the rebuilding of railroads which will rival the automobile boom of the 1920s for its effect on general industry.

But the utility industry, although power sales are expanding and in some cases taxing capacity to produce, has shown little inclination to start a broad program of the rebuilding of railroads which will rival the automobile boom of the 1920s for its effect on general industry.

But if there now can be devised some basis for pooling government and private power so that there could be a development of markets on a cooperative basis, the hard sellings might disappear, and a period of plant expansion might open.

Such is the expressed idea. The social security board, faced
