The names of all candidates reported for election to village and library board offices last week will be placed on the ballots due to the fact that no withdrawal of petitions was made at closing time Saturday.

The only contest will be in the race for village trustees. Ten persons have filed for the six offices. Village President Earl Hafey and Village Clerk A. C. Bunting are the only ones to file.

Board of Education trustees will be elected at the Waukegan hospital Tuesday afternoon after having been nominated.

TELEPHONE, BARRINGTON NO. 1

NAILING A HALF TRUTH

(By Congressman Ralph E. Church)

Several friendly critics have been kind enough to write to express their disagreement to a statement I made that "while states could be given the right to nullify acts of Congress, the legislative power of judicial review was not." Those who do not share the constitutional convention was any proposal made to place a limitation upon the supreme court in that regard?" The basis of their contrary contention is set forth in the following typical quotation from one of these welcome letters: "Four times at the constitutional convention in 1787 James Madison, James Wilson and others proposed that the constitution contain a provision giving the court the explicit right to pass on the validity of acts of congress. Each time that proposal was voted down."

That same statement has been made in the congress this last month. It is always a basic part of the argument of those who believe that congress and the presidents themselves should have the sole right to determine the validity of their own acts. It has appeared in pamphlets, circulars and books contending that the court "surped" the power it exercises.

While no official spokesman who has thus far appeared before the state judiciary committee has disputed this statement, to the contrary, the validity of acts of congress, then it is no reason to believe that the court has "surped" its power. The true facts will be found only in the documents and records of the period of 1787.

There was a motion made at the convention and rejected four times (June 4, 6, July 21 and August 15). That much is true. But it was not a motion to the effect that the judicial power be made more specific. No such proposal was ever made and rejected. The proposal which James Madison and the others urged was to give the supreme court given "VETO" power comparable to that of the president. That is a very different proposition from the power of judicial review which the founders wished the court to have.

The distinction between "veto power" and "judicial power" can best be made by an illustration: A bill is passed by the house and the senate which makes it a crime to criticize the congress. The president has veto power and can, for any reason he sees fit, refuse to sign the bill. Let us assume that he signs it into law. Then an act of congress has been passed and the constitutionality of the act has been determined.

John Doe criticizes congress. He is arrested and sent to prison under the act of congress. He appeals to the supreme court on the ground that the constitution gives him freedom of speech. The attorney general of the United States contests it at the ground that John Doe was arrested under an act of congress.

Thus the case is before the supreme court on a question of constitutionality. The court places the act of congress beside the constitution and finds that it is unconstitutional. It decides that the constitution, being the "supreme law," must prevail and therefore renders its decision in favor of John Doe. He goes free, an act of congress notwithstanding.

We must guard against adulterated facts and propaganda of half-truths so prevalent today. We must understand exactly how the supreme court functions.

WHAT'S GOING ON

(Courtesy, The United States News)

A maxim of modern warfare is that the side of the heaviest fire is the side of the heaviest artillery. Mr. Roosevelt is endeavoring to adapt that maxim to the problem of war.

Guiding the stream of white smoke from the battle over the supreme court is this conviction: victory will go to the side that has the most and the best of all the tools of war.

The reason advanced is that senators, with the power of the pocket veto, can make it impossible for the president to speak in opposition.

Initial skirmishes in his follow-up of the momentous opposition taken by the senatorial spotlight away from their opponents.

From now on, two rival groups will be in the Senate: the national, state and city and workers; a choice of two types of agencies to back up their demands; and two groups of senators and to conduct bargaining with the administration.

Initial skirmishes can definitely be made because the event toward which organized labor in America has been moving for a decade now has occurred.

By deciding last week to set up a national, state and city and workers; a choice of two types of agencies to back up their demands; and two groups of senators and to conduct bargaining with the administration.
