WANTED: A NEW COMMERCE CLAUSE The time has come for the American people to write into the constitution of the United States a new definition of erce among the states."

Nearly all of the issues which are debated in present-day affairs, or both, seem to have arisen through a blurred conn of dual sovereignty.

Dundee, Illinois 8:00 a. m., Holy Communion. 9:30 a. m., Church school. 11:00 a. m., Choral Eucharist id sermon. Progress in a civilized community, indeed in any organ-ed society, depends upon definition of law. Living as we do nder a written constitution, it becomes more than ever mportant that the inadequacies of definition shall not go uncorrected.

The responsibility for initial steps falls directly upon those of us who are opposed to Mr. Roosevelt's plan to compel the courts to add by interpretation to the powers of the federal government. True progressivism insists that changes shall be made only through the process of amendment pre-scribed in the constitution itself.

Relations between citizens who occupy the status of oyer and employe have long been regarded as primarily a local matter. So have production and manufacture as sted with transportation or distribution transportation or distribution. What has, become increasingly apparent, however, in ent years is that with the enormous growth in population, whole economic mechanism has been complicated by any of factors and ingredients which are so closely related to one another as to appear at times inseparable only as a tter of geography. '

From the standpoint of federal and state sovereignty, se ingredients have seemed to blend into a simultaneous ration moving with irresistible momentum in obedience only to the demands of markets not merely across state lines across international boundaries.

At times, by analogy to the flow of rivers, our jurisprudence has sought to establish what has become known as a "stream of commerce." This has been predicated on the legal fiction that mere motion established a differentiation or that me to rest, an intrastate power is invol reas during the the actual movement of the stream the Such a definition can no longer serve the interrelated ds of a growing economic structure. The human body is not a series of anatomical jurisdictions but an organic whole functioning not simply through the flow of blood in veins or arteries, but through the conscious impulses of a coordin-

We are confronted nowadays hardly as much by a co flict of federal and state power as by a lack of coordinated operation between states and also between the states and the federal authority.—The United States News.

LET'S TAX GREEN NECKTIES

There is a moral aspect to diversion of taxes collected from motorists that should not be overlooked in any discus-

of the problem

Let's take it for granted that some of the projects for hich the state has "borrowed" money from gas tax funds id registration fees are perfectly useful and valid, as many For instance everyone agrees that un nd payment of school costs are perfectly legitimate items e state's budget and it was to these two items that a large ol costs are perfectly legitimate items the state's budget and it was to these two items that a larger at of the revenue from motor taxes was diverted. But these receive funds from the general taxes we all you need estate, personal property, income, etc. To say at certain individuals must pay an additional tax simply cause they own a motor which, is obviously as unfair as would be to say architrarily that every man who wears a world but say architrarily that every man who wears a world but say architrarily that every man who wears a second to say architrarily that every man who wears a second to say architrarily that every man who wears a second to say architrarily that every man who wears a second to say a contract at a loss of the same of the
