DISTINCTIVE DOCTRINES OF THE LUTHERAN CHURCH.

1. The Lutheran Church believes that the entire Bible, including every word and phrase, is the inspired Word of God, and therefore the infallible truth.

2. The Lutheran Church holds that the Bible must be accepted as it reads, being allowed to interpret itself and must not be interpreted by the reason or intelligence of man. It therefore looks upon Baptism as a means of grace and believes in the real presence of the Body and Blood of Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar.

3. The Lutheran Church teaches that it will maintain cannot be saved by character or good works but alone by faith in the merits of the blood shed on Calvary. Good works must follow as a fruit of such faith.

4. The Lutheran Church has always been ready not only to cooperate outwardly but to join in an organic union with any church-body which accepts the Word of God in all its parts as the sole source of doctrine without giving it hostile interpretation and earnestly strive to put these teachings into practice in all churches of its constituency.

5. The Lutheran Church is ready to hold negotiations with any Christian church-body on that basis. It holds that it is unwise and wrong for church-bodies to remain separate simply on account of differences in church customs and usages.

Times are getting better. They tell us the quality of bridge prizes is improving.

After all, if it didn't rain like this occasionally, how could these golf fans tend to business?

Squire: "Did you send for me, my Lord?"

Sir Lancelot: "Make haste, vasal. Bring me a can opener. Me-thinks I've a flea in me knicker."

A good brooder makes often spots out the difference between success and failure with your chicks. We sell the Jamesway brooder stove. We have them on order and returned. Come in and look them over.

Here rests poor Mrs. Cummers. Her heart pruned a serious leak. We her daughter of 17 summers, stayed at home every night for a week.

"Jimmy, you act like a pig. Do you know what a pig is?"

"Yes, Daddy, a pig is the child of a hog."

Another girl who ought to have a great big hand in the new about to make a left turn.

Water, water, everywhere, but none piped into the house, is that it? The lady on the farm appreciates what a water system in the house means. We can be glad to give you an estimate. Enjoy life with a Myers water system. We will be mighty glad to talk it over with you.

"So your dog is pedigreed?" "Say, if this dog could talk, he'd speak to either of us."

WANTED: A NEW COMMERCIAL CLAUSE

The time has come for the American people to write into the constitution of the United States a new definition of "commerce among the states."

Nearly all of the issues which are debated in present-day affairs, both, seem to have arisen through a blurred conception of dual sovereignty.

Progress in a civilized community, indeed in any organized society, depends upon definition of law. Living as we do in a written constitution, it is not surprising that we are ignorant that the inadequacies of definition shall not go uncorrected.

The responsibility for initial step falls directly upon those of us who are opposed to Mr. Roosevelt's plan to compel the courts to add by interpretation to the powers of the federal government. True progressivism insists that changes shall be made only through the process of amendment prescribed in the constitution.

Relations between citizens who occupy the status of employer and employee have long been regarded as primarily the matter of the state. The manufacture and manufacture as contrasted with transportation or distribution.

What has become increasingly apparent, however, in recent years is that with the enormous growth in population, the whole economic mechanism has been complicated by an array of factors and ingredients which are so closely related to one another as to appear at times inseparable only as a matter of geography.

From the standpoint of federal and state sovereignty, these ingredients have seemed to blend into a simultaneous operation moving with irresistible momentum in obedience to the demands of markets and not merely across state lines but across international boundaries.

At times, by analogy to the flow of rivers, our jurisprudence has sought to define the boundaries of commerce as "stream of commerce." This has been predicated on the notion that mere motion abated a differentiation or that when the stream came to rest, an intrastate power is invoked, whereas in motion it is interstate.

Such a definition can no longer serve the streamlined needs of a growing economic structure. The human body is not a series of anatomical segments, but an organic whole functioning not simply through the flow of blood in veins and arteries, but through the conscious impulses of a coordinating brain.

We are confronted nowadays hardly as much by a conflict of federal and state power as by a lack of coordinated operation between states and also between the states and the federal authority.—The United States News.

LET'S TAX GREEN NECKTIES

There is a moral aspect to diversion of taxes collected from motorists that should not be overlooked in any discussion of the problem.

Let's take it for granted that some of the projects for which the state has "borrowed" money for gas tax funded and registration fees are perfectly useful and valid, as many of them are.

For instance everyone agrees that unemployment relief and current of school costs are legitimate liabilities on the state's budget and it was to these two items that a large part of the revenue from motor taxes was diverted.

There is some reason to believe that the general taxes we pay on real estate, personal property and income, and so on, to certain individuals must pay an additional tax simply because they own a motor vehicle, is obviously as unfair as it is inequitable to say that every citizen who owns a green necktie must pay an extra tax. It sounds absurd, doesn't it, but examine the proposition closely and you will discover that there is an excellent parallel.

In fact the only tax on green neckties and registration fees are constitutional because they were nominally pledged for highway purposes. To use them for anything else is manifestly unfair and is an unwarranted imposition on the motorist's public.

Book Circulation

Reaches New High at Public Library

Book circulation again at a new high. Through the efforts of the Barrington public library during the month of March, considerable gains were made in the circulation of books.

Two of the new shelves are at the new branch library, which was placed in the juvenile part of the building. The new shelves are at the new branch library, which was placed in the juvenile part of the building.
