Children and Flowers
By LUCIA MALLORY
As I walked to the library this morning I witnessed a little scene that has troubled me all day long. Mrs. Endicott has a lovely garden and two attractive little girls. The wide stretch of shady lawn with its border of bright flowers, has always seemed to me an ideal place for children to play. Where could they learn to love and appreciate beauty better than in such surroundings?

This morning three-year-old Betty was following her mother around as she gathered an armful of roses. A bed of pansies lifted smiling faces to the child, who stooped to pick a blossom and handed it to her mother with the exclamation, "Pretty! Pretty!" Betty looked very much like a small wet pussy herself as she stood there in the sunshine, but Mrs. Endicott answered her sharply, "No! No! Betty must not touch! Mother's flowers!"

Preoccupied with her own pleasant occupation of cutting roses, the mother did not see the light die out of Betty's face as the blossom she had picked so joyously, dropped unheeded to the ground. In one corner of the garden someone had stationed a painted wooden figure of a child with a watering pot. Strange that the watered form should stand content with the child who had her real child was never allowed to share her mother's interest and joy in them.

"I'd like to take Mrs. Endicott to visit the garden of my friend, Flora Barron. There isn't much space in her back yard, and I do not see how so many children and flowers can grow and thrive together, for some of the neighbors' children are always playing there with Flora's four."

When I asked my friend how she managed to raise both children and flower successfully, she laughed and said, "Oh, the children do most of the work in the garden. I'm too busy to do very much of it myself."

Knowing how Flora has always liked to grow flowers, I can guess that she would fine some time for gardening if she did not feel that the children needed the responsibility. "Of course those fine old lilacs were also given slight raises. Those of grade school age and under are classed in the children's rate.

Lions to Meet at Olson's
The Barrington Lions club will hold its weekly dinner meetings at Olson's on South Cook street, starting next Monday evening. At the last meeting the club voted to approve an arrangement with Earl Olson, made last week by a committee headed by J. C. Cadwallader.

Local Brevities

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Butor have moved to the house at 314 W. Lincoln avenue. Mr. Butor will be the manual training instructor at the public school.

Mrs. Clarence Walbaum, 648 S. Hough street, underwent an appendectomy at St. Joseph hospital, Sigin, this week.

Miss Mabel Schaefer, 414 E. Main street, has returned to her work after a vacation.

C. C. Hoffman Jr., of Chicago, nephew of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Moroney, 147 Raymond avenue, spent Monday and Tuesday visiting them.

Mr. and Mrs. O. C. Blischek, 644 Grove avenue, entertained the following guests at dinner Saturday evening: Mr. and Mrs. K. Kemper and son of Rogers Park, Mrs.

It would be a better world if every child had a garden!
