Burglars Net $300 Loot at Wauconda

Burglars forced entry into the Bellaire Country club at Slocum lake near Wauconda last Wednesday and stole cups, assorted liquor and a musical instrument valued at $300.

John Williams, one of the operators of the club, discovered the burglary shortly before noon Thursday when he entered the dining room to oversee preparations for dinner.

The dining room was in disorder and glass was scattered over the floor. The burglars had smashed the coin box on a mechanical graphophone but did not take the coins.

Three silver loving cups, valued at $50, a six-string guitar, valued at $25 and assorted liquor valued at $25 was gone from the dining room. The prowlers gained entrance to the place by forcing a window on the south side of the building.

HOME EDUCATION

"The Child's First School Is the Family"—Froebel

Issued by National Kindergarten Assn. 3 W. 40th St. New York

IF THINGS AREN'T EASY

"Look, Tom, one piece should go in that hole and then lean this one over here."

No answer.
"See, Tom?"
"Yes, Daddy," in a voice very low for a five-year-old.

In the midst of scattered toys, Mr. Brandon and little Tom sat on the living-room floor. Mrs. Brandon was sewing in the arm-chair nearby and as the clock in the hall struck seven she rose saying, "That's bedtime, Tom. Come on, dear, off you go."

When Sue Brandon returned she found her young husband, staring into the fire.

"You know, Sue," he began slowly, "I'm troubled about Tom."

"Troubled?" Sue was surprised. "Yes," Roger continued. "Something's wrong. Haven't you noticed how quiet he is lately?"

"Well, I believe he has seemed unusually so these last few weeks. But I'm sure he isn't ill. You know just last Monday at the office Dr. Stafford told me how strong and healthy Tom is."

"I wonder he should be more interested in his toys at night but with hesitation, I realized the trouble was much deeper than that. I believe the truth is that he is afraid—afraid to do anything because it may be wrong."

"But, we have tried to be so careful with him. He should be as sure of himself as any child. Every evening his father plays with him and insists that Tom learn how to use his toys."

"Insists?" Miss Martin was silent a few seconds, then she said softly, "Mrs. Brandon, may I suggest that perhaps the difficulty lies in that very thing? You know, older people sometimes expect too much of a little child."

"Oh, Perhaps we have done that. I know his toys are advanced for his age; we thought that difficult things were best for him."

"Difficult things are all right as long as difficult means not easy; but when it refers to something really beyond the child's development it is bound to affect his self-confidence if forced upon him, even though it is done by the most conscientious of parents."

"So it is our fault. I understand that now. You will show us a way to help Tom, won't you?"

"Of course. And because he is so young it should require only sincere sympathy and understanding to rebuild the confidence he has lost."

New toys, easy encouragement devoid of dictatorial tones, continued association with others of his own age, and particularly a growing companionship with his father—a new joy in playing with him, a give and take, with Tom doing his share—these things soon wrought a change in the sensitive boy, and 'twas not many weeks before he was playing about the kindergarten as carefree as the other children. Miss Martin now found ample justification for her belief in Tom's native intelligence.
