Grasshoppers Found in Large Quantity; Reports Treatments

Carl J. Weinman of the grasshopper control of the U. S. department of agriculture was in Lake county last week and found a large quantity of grasshoppers present in alfalfa and red clover. These are apt to move to the next fields or injure the new growth of clover or alfalfa, he reported. If soybeans are in the joining field, grasshoppers are apt to go in and do considerable damage.

He recommended that a strip of net alfalfa or clover, a few feet wide, be left in the field so that the grasshoppers can go in there. This will serve as a trap and then the farmer can bait this strip several times after the grasshoppers have been concentrated in it. It might be well to bait the margins of those fields on the side joining soybeans or corn, he pointed out.
