Miss Elizabeth Pollock

Miss Elizabeth Pollock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Pollock of College Springs, Ia., was united in marriage to Ivan W. Lageschulte, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman G. Lageschulte, 214 W. Station street, Friday, June 24.

The beautiful ceremony took place at the home of the bride's parents in the midst of white hollyhocks, ferns, white roses and lilies. Paul Blair of Atlantic, Ia., sang "I Love You Truly" and "O Promise Me." The bride, entering the room to the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March, played by Miss Judith Carlson, wore an aqua blue silk and lace formal, and carried white roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Esther Pollock, sister of the bride, wore shell pink organza and Johanna Hills roses. Carl Anderson of Barrington was the groom's attendant. The father of the bride and her brother-in-law Rev. William Nelson Jr., were united. After a reception for the 25 relatives and friends, Mr. and Mrs. Lageschulte left for a short trip. Among those attending the wedding from Barrington were Mrs. Mildred Faulkner, Miss Elaine Faulkner, Richard Faulkner, Miss Amy Anderson and Carl Anderson, and Miss Judith Carlson of Rockford.

ly they had recounted, in Frank's presence, "must" think he had said or done. In this particular case, Frank's desire, clearly, was less to call attention to his bluntness than to call attention to himself. He merely used his bluntness and his remarks about it as an attention getting device, that he might be noticed, and for the moment become the center of the stage.

Obviously the treatment of Frank's case must include his parents. What children do and say should not be held before them. It develops self-consciousness and vanity.

Wes Doris had been praised by a stranger. Quite naturally the words pleased her and she repeated them to her mother.

New her mother might have said, as age mother actually did say, "O, probably the lady was just making fun of you. People say a lot of things they don't mean. You look well enough." But this reply would not have been wise.

A better way to have met such a situation would have been to say, "I am glad my dear. Your behavior must have pleased the lady very much, for the way we speak and act has much to do with the way we look, so when we are kind and good, people do like to look at us." Had the child been older, the mother might have added, "There is an old saying that 'Handsome is as Handsome does' which means, that our attractiveness depends more on what we think and do than it does upon our features or on what we wear."
