Thoreau wrote of the little things such as the sounds of the breaking up of the ice in the spring at Walden. John Burroughs believed that nature observations should be made literature by passing through the mind of man, and should not be statistical.

Donald Cullross Peattie is probably writing the loveliest nature books of our time, and Henry Beston has written one of the books most worthy of being read, namely "The Outermost House," a story of Cape Cod.

procity meetings will please notify Mrs. Robert G. Work gave a delightful program Tuesday afternoon to 35 members who gathered to hear her review of nature writers. The occasion was the first number of the reading courses presented by the literature committee of the Woman's club.

Mrs. Work stated that although man has tried to separate himself from it he is really a part of nature. Nature writers can take us away for a time from the nervous irritation of personal conflicts in today's complex life. Books make a good substitute for nature itself.

Although some claim that nature was not appreciated before the time of the romantics, the speaker disproved that claim by reading beautiful nature passages from the early literature of the Psalms and Job and Isaiah of the Bible and from Greek, Roman and Chinese literature.

In the middle 1700's in England lived a nature lover, Gilbert White, who wrote of his observations in letters to friends, one of whom was James Barrington. By chance, his letters were preserved and have been published in a book which affords increasing interest to every generation.

We expect nature in poetry. In John Massfield we have a poet who produces an essence of beauty which makes the reader feel that his soul has grown. Other nature poets are Wordsworth, Tennyson, Emily Dickinson and Sidney Lanier, the speaker stated.

William H. Hudson, the great nature writer, gave to the world descriptions of the Argentine, Teyton, Emily Dickinson and Sidney Lanier, the speaker stated. "Land's End" portrays the MOMMY LET ME STAY UP TO TALK TO YOU!

MANY men who travel make it a practice to telephone home every night or two. It's the way to make sure that every one is well, and that things are running smoothly. And it means so much to those at home. Daddy's voice is reassuring—exciting. It is fun to let him share in family pleasures... comforting to have his help on family problems.

Next time you or any member of your family goes away, banish loneliness with frequent voice-visits. Telephoning costs surprisingly little. And by having the charge "reversed," you may have the amount appear on your home telephone bill.

Labor rates are in effect after 7 P. M. and all day Sunday. Then a station-to-station call will follow you.
